With the possible exception of Britain, which as an island has a certain advantage, the countries of Western Europe have not been particularly successful in closing the doors on illegal immigrants. Until the European economies went into for the administration. Administration sources say that Mr. Wilson's actions are being examined by the State Department's Bureau of European Affairs. But department spokesmen declined to

In the Marcinkus case, administration officials said that Mr. Wilson wrote a letter in 1982 on behalf of the archbishop to Attorney General William French Smith, a longtime friend and fellow member of Mr. Reagan's "kitchen cabinet" of close advisers.

When he wrote the letter, Mr.

Wilson, a Los Angeles developer and rancher who has been co-trusiee of the legal trust that bas man-aged Mr. Reagan's private assets since 1973, was the president's unpaid personal envoy to the Holy See. Mr. Reagan named Mr. Wilson ambassador in January and the Senate confirmed him in March when the United States established full diplomatic relations with the Holy See.

fo an interview in Rome. Mr. Wilson drew a distinction between the time he was the president's unpaid envoy and the period after his confirmation as ambassador.

"You must realize that as a per-sonal envoy of the president, I was not a paid employee of the government," he said. "I was free to carry on my own business as I saw fit." The American-born Archbishop Marcinkus has come under scrutiny by Italian authorities over his and the Vatican bank's involvement to events that led in 1982 to the collapse of the $1.2-billion Banco Ambrosiano. The archbishop, as president of the Vatican bank, issued "letters of patronage" to Roberto Calvi, the Ambrosiano president. Mr. Calvi's body was found hanging from a bridge in London in Juoe 1982.

Mr. Wilson apparently was seeking to determine the status of any U.S. inquiries and to vouch for the archbishop, a source said.

In Mr. Wilson's letter, which bypassed usual Department of Justice screening processes allegedly be-cause of the writer's friendship with Mr. Smith, he expressed his faith in the archbishop, according to an official familiar with the correspon-dence. The official said the action was "very odd" and "put everybody in a very awkward position." Mr. Wilson's letter drew a re-buke from Kenneth W. Starr, who was then counselor to the attorney general and is now a judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washing-

Despite Judge Starr's letter, Mr. Wilson invited Archbishop Marcinkus to breakfast at his Rome villa when Mr. Smith and his wife, Jean, were his guests to November 1982. And as recently as May, sources say, Mr. Wilson telephoned The FBI director, William H. Webster, on a special secure telephone line in the U.S. Embassy in Rome to inquire about possible U.S. interest in the prelate.

In the interview in his Rome office. Mr. Wilson said that he had invited the arcbbishop to breakfast when the Smiths were visiting because "it just seemed an appropriate time to get them together." He added that Mr. Smith and the archhishop discussed only tennis and golf during their meeting.

Mr. Wilson said that he had not asked Mr. Smith to do anything for the archbishop during the break-fast or later. As for the phone call to Mr. Webster from the embassy, he said: "That's personal f prefer not to answer.

Defense Ministers Charles Hernu of France, Giovanni Spadolini of Italy, Manfred Wörner of West Germany. Michael Heseltine of Britain and Narcis Serra of Spain signed the agreement in prin-ciple, ratifying a basic agreement reached in Cologne in December by the chiefs of their air forces.

The project is partly intended to lessen NATO's dependence on U.S. military technology.

The agreement provides for a six-month technical and industrial study of how best to build the fighter and calls for the ministers to meet again in Rome in March to review the findings.

The study is expected to consider

Kuwaiti Defense Chief Visits Moscow

MOSCOW (Combined Dispatches) — Kuwait's defense minister, Sheikh Salem al-Sabah, arrived in Moscow on Monday for a 10-day visit during which he is expected to seek supplies of anti-sucraft equipment and other military hardware.

Official sources in Kuwait said that he would sign a $327-million arms deal to buttress defenses against further Iranian attacks on Arah oil shipping in the Gulf. The deal, the sources said, includes mainly surfaceto-air missiles, surface-to-surface missiles, armored vehicles and other unspecified types of military hardware. The United States refused last month to provide Kniwait with shoulderfired Stinger anti-nireraft rockets. Western diplomats in Moscow said they expected the Soviet Union to be sympathetic to Kuwait's needs.

They said the Soviet Union would be anxious to please Kuwait, the only member of the conservative six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council to have diplomatic ties with Moscow, In enhance its image in the region. Middle Eastern diplomats said the Soviet Union's long-term nim was to establish relations with Saudi Arabia. They said Moscow regarded good links with Kuwait as a vital step in that direction.

Chinese Journal Criticizes Moscow

BELIING (Reuters) - China accused the Soviet Union on Monday of growing more hostile and stuhborn. It said the two countries could never cover their past friendship. Writing in the latest edition of the official Beijing Review, two political commentators, Zi Xu and Wang Jinqing, criticized Soviet support for Vietnam and questioned whether Chioese-Soviet relations had improved. The articles appeared shortly after Deputy Foreign Minister Qiao Qichen, a key figure in Chinese-Soviet normalization talks, returned from a trip to Moscow and reported no progress.

"It is unrealistic and impossible for Chinese-Soviet relations to return to what they once were in history," Mr. Wang wrote. The two countries split in 1960. "Slanders and attacks launched against China are part of an escalating anti-China propaganda campaign by the Soviet Union," Mr. Zi said, adding: "Moscow's sincerity in normalizing Chinese-Soviet relations will be judged by its acrions."

ASEAN Issues Cambodia Statement

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) -- Six non-Communist Southeast Asian countries called again Monday for an end to Vietnam's military occupation of Cambodia.

The statement was issued by the foreign ministers of Indonesia, the Philippines, Malaysia, Singapore, Brunei and Thailand at the opening of the 17th annual meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nutions. It said that, for more than five years, ASEAN and the international community "have called upon Vietnam to cease its military occupation" of Cambodia.

The statement said that "the primary objectives of such a settlement are the exercise of the inalienable right of self-determination by the Kampuchean (Cambodian) people and the restoration of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Kampuchea.

EC Ministers Discuss Spending Limits

BRUSSELS (Reuters) - Finance ministers of the European Community met Monday to discuss imposing strict limits on community spending, a key condition of the deal struck recently to end a fight over Britain's budget payments.

Diplomats said Britain was expected to urge its partners to make a quick decision on tighter rules for community cash management so that the accord reached at last month's Fontainebleau summit meeting could be submitted for approval to national parliaments, a process experted to take about a year.

Government leaders at the meeting agreed to increase the ceiling on the value added tax that the community can raise from member countries from 1 percent to 1.4 percent by Jan. 1, 1986. The executive commission has said it will need the new funds by October 1985. However, the diplomats said they did not expect Monday's talks to resolve the issue,

British Dockers Called Out on Strike

LONDON (Reuters) - Leaders of Britain's dockers called Monday for a national strike starting at midnight to protest management moves to get iron ore to a steel plant whose supplies were running low because of the 17-week-old coal mine strike.

A committee of Britain's biggest union, the Transport and General Workers Union, called the dockers out to protest the state-owned British Steel Corp.'s using nonregistered dockers to move ore for a steel plant at Scunthorpe. Union dockers supporting the coal strike had refused to handle the ore.

Eight hours of union-management talks on the coal strike, which was called to protest the closings of uneconomic pits, ended Monday without agreement. Further talks were scheduled for July 18.

centives to leave West Germany for Russian Reportedly Seeking Asylum

MILAN (AP) - A Soviet film director, Andrei Tarkovsky, has decided to seek political asylum in the West, a Roman Catholic organization announced Monday.

A spokesman for the Milan-based Movimento Popolare said the 51-year-old director would announce his decision at a news conference Tuesday. The spokesman said Mr. Tarkovsky had decided "to give up Soviet citizenship after useless efforts to get a regular authorization for working abroad."

The spokesman said Mr. Tarkovsky and his wife, Larissa, who have lived in Italy for 18 months, wanted to settle in the United States. Mr. Tarkovsky's "Andrei Ruhlyov" has been widely acclaimed; his "Nostalgia" and "Solaris" won prizes at the Cannes film festival.

Conference Opens on Africa Refugees

GENEVA (Reuters) — The United Nations secretary-general, Javier Pérez de Cuellar, opened an international conference Monday that will discuss solutions to the problems of refugees in Africa and support for the economics of bost countries.

He said the second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa came at a time of crisis that was far graver than when the first conference was held three years ago.

He said that the main task for representatives of 80 states at the meeting would be to help the African countries that have received about four million refugees. The three-day conference will examine about 130 projects submitted by 16 countries to help them combat socio-economic problems caused by the refugees. The proposals would require more than $362 million in international aid.

Industries in U.S. Could Not Gear Up For a Big War, Air Force Study Finds

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — A new and comprehensive Air Force inquiry has concluded that American industry would be unable to accelerate to the production rates of aircraft, missiles and other arms estimated to be necessary for a large-scale war. Military contractors, according to the report, lack the ability either to to respond the needs of an armed forces under surprise attack or to mobilize for wartime production even after a warning period, such as the two years before the United States entered World War II. In addition, the government has planned neither for a rapid expansion nor for a steady acceleration of production over a longer period, the study found, despite the Reagan administration's emphasis on the industrial base in its plans for building military strength.

The most common constraints on weapons production, the report said, would be shortages of skilled labor, materials, tools and ma-chines, manufacturing space and capital, plus long periods needed to produce complicated parts.

The production capabilities of U.S. military contractors have been questioned before, but the Air Force's survey appears to be the most sweeping and detailed assess-

The unclassified survey was conducted by senior Air Force officers and executives of the aerospace industry, including representatives of such prominent military contractors as General Dynamics, Hughes Aircraft, McDonnell Douglas, Grumman, Sperry and Westinghouse.

This strategy requires a military force ready to light on short notice, a logistics system able to sustain the fighting force for many months and a weapons industry able to shift quickly into high gear.

The survey found that produc-tion schedules of large transport aircraft, such as the C-5 made by Lockheed, could not be accelerated because of inadequate space, milling and machining equipment and chemical processing facilities.

Nor could Hughes Helicopters, manufacturers of the Army's new AH-64 Apache, produce the attack craft faster, because of what the report said was insufficient skilled labor, material handling equipment, inspection gauges and data

Rulings Against Liberties

The United States Supreme Court ended its 1983-84 term with a pile of important decisions that seem disastrous for civil liberties, civil rights and even respect for law. The current majority continues to reach out awkwardly, even injudiciously, to open loopboles in the Bill of Rights. For all the restraint preached by conservatives, the final week alone brought three decisions that increase governmental power over innocent and guilty citizens alike. Even a short list of legal low-water marks would have to include the new "good faith" exception to the exclusionary rule.

That rule is the weapon the court has used to stand sentinel against unreasonable searches that violate Fourth Amendment rights. In 1914 a unanimous court said the Constitution would be meaningless if law officers could use at trial the fruits of illegal - that is, unreasonable - searches. Now the court announces that when a search or arrest warrant proves defective, the evidence can be used anyway because police relied "reasonahly" on the defective document. If the concept of a reasonable unreasonable search is hard to accept, what is worse is the intimation that more exceptions to the rule will follow.

Another decision will be felt for years hy those who look to the courts to vindicate hasic rights. The court beld that parents of hlack children may not sue the Internal Revenue Service to get tough on private academies that segregate. Are blacks hurt by 1ax breaks for schools that drain whites from public schools? needlessly called into question many goodfaith efforts to integrate work forces.

Two other decisions last week, involving Virginia prisons and Los Angeles jails, raise questions about how accurately the justices perceive life behind bars. Here is what Chief Justice Burger said speaking of jail conditions for prisoners awaiting trial - the same trial at which they will be presumed innocent:

"No one familiar with even the barest outline of the problems of the administration of a prison or jail ... could fail to be aware of the ease with which one can obtain release on bail or personal recognizance. The very fact of nonrelease pending trial thus is a significant factor bearing on the security measures that are im-perative to proper administration of a deten-tion facility." In other words, forget about innocent-until-proven-guilty. These people are dangerous. Also, presumably, guilty.

The chief justice is eloquent in speeches about the need for more humane prisons. Now, in his Virginia case opinion, he denies that they have any duty to safeguard an inmate's dignity from cell searches and the whim of guards. A 5-to-4 majority of the court ruled that a prisoner's most personal effects, even a picture of a girlfriend or children, are not safe from arbitrary seizure and destruction. How much more decency radiates from Justice Stevens's dissenting view that American society is capable of honoring minimal privacy rights for even its most despised members.

The uneasy sense generated by these decisions is that justice, never blind but usually evenhanded, has become political. Justice does tend to run in cycles, and a slice of America may be satisfied. To us it sounds mean-spirited. So. too, to Justice Brennan. In a dissent on the last day of this term, he wrote: "There is hope, however, that in time this or some later court will restore these precious freedoms to their rightful place as a primary protection for our citizens against overreaching officialdom."

As the Deficit Goes Down, Taxes Need Not Go Up

"The captain has turned off the no smoking sign and you are now free to smoke in the designated area."

P ARIS — The nonevent of the year will be the budget deficit. The unmatched growth in the American economy has increased government revenues and limited expenditures beyond expectations, reducing the federal deficit for the fiscal year ending next Sept. 30 to less than $175 billion (down from $195 billion in fiscal 1983) and increasing the state and local surplus to $60 billion. This makes a net government deficit of about $115 billion, far from the $200 hillion so often cited.

The last quarter of this calendar year should reflect contioued improvement, and 1984 will probably end with a combined government deficit

It seems less and less likely that the upturn in the deficit that is supposed to take place in 1985 will in fact happen. The cyclical portion of the deficit may well be eliminated next year and the economie base under next year's growth will be much larger than was anticipated six months ago.

It is correct to include state and local surpluses when calculating our deficit. The National Income Accounts maintained by the Commerce Department have done so for years. The OECD, the interoational statistical organization established by the industrial countries, includes state and local surpluses or deficits for calculating the ratio of

The final figures for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30 will be available before the end of October. Thus, Americans will be in a position to judge the true state of the deficit before they vote in November. A nonevent should mean a non-issue.

Having identified a nonevent, I turn now to identify an event, an event which is not sufficiently appreciated. Thanks again to the remarkable growth in the economy, to the reduction in the government deficit and to the reduction in taxes, usiness and personal savings will almost certainly increase this year by more than both the increase in all our borrowings, government and private, and the increase in capital investment for plant and equipment. This has not happened since 1981.

In the National Income accounts, gross private savings are the total of personal savings after consumption, plus business cash flow. This figure is reduced by the federal deficit and increased by It is logical that state and local accounts be the state and local surplus, and the result is Ameri-

Schmidt's Defense Balloon: A Useful Nonstarter

PARIS - Could the exercise of power and the exercise of imagination be incompatible? It has taken nearly two years after leaving power for former Chancellor Hel-mut Schmidt to make a spectacular security proposal concerning the merging of French and West German defense efforts. Mr. Schmidt suggests that the two countries could, by mobilizing reserves, field 30 divisions enough to defend the Western Europe and deter any attack. The joint effort would permit a considerable reduction in U.S. army units in Europe. Most of the cost increase for conventional arms could be borne by Bonn if France expanded its auonomous nuclear force to include ocrats and the Union of the National Center, the protection of West Germany. What would have happened if while the rigidly right-wing National Liberation Movement got only 12 percent of the vote. this proposal had been made three years ago, when Mr. Schmidt was still chancellor? They express evident skepticism as to the future credibility of the U.S. guarantee for Europe. Last but not least, they very spe-cifically exclude the possibility of the Federal Republic having even indirect access to nuclear weapons, through a veto right or a dual key to the French nuclear arsenal. The recognition of France's world role, the diffidence vis-à-vis the United States and the maintenance of the non-nuclear status of the Federal Republic should satisfy France's Gaullist tradition. However, in the triangular game of reassurance and diffidence between Washington, Paris and Bonn, roles have subtly changed, even if primary concerns stay the same. In the early 1960s, when Charles de Gaulle proposed, through the Fouchet plan, a degree of European cooperation in defense, West Germany opposed the plan out of loyalty to the United States. Bonn was not willing — nor is it today, despite Mr. Schmidt's assumption — to exchange a secure American guarantee for a nascent French one. If Mr. Schmidt's proposals were taken for an official West German position, which they definitely are not, one could say, observing French reactions, that Bonn and leader to a French-German tandern. Paris have switched roles. Polite French skepticism is based partly on the fact that Mr. Schmidt's ideas could weaken the U.S. guarantee at a time when the military balance of forces in Europe is precarious.

In fact, it would seem that conti-nuity largely prevails. Helmut Schmidt's plan is unacceptable in Paris for two traditional reasons:

First, it ultimately presupposes a balancing of French defense efforts between nuclear and conventional forces, even if Bonn is willing to pay the conventional bill. Second, it implies extension of France's nuclear deterrence to the Federal Republic

Both shifts would mean France moving away, in its defense posture. from a position of comfortable amhiguity to one of straightforward clarity. Such a shift is deemed to be postically counterproductive in France, and strategically premature. It runs against the reaffirmed official policy of France, with its emphasis on nuclear weapons and its essentially national character. Can a medium-size nuclear power extend its nuclear deterrence? What the French want to preserve as best they can is a policy of independence and the maintenance of a structural difference vis-à-vis a non-nuclear Germany. This desire to differentiate itself from the Fed-

France's initial choice to become nuclear. Mr. Schmidt's proposal is viewed in Paris by many as a bid to reduce that difference, by means of an attractive proposal appealing at the same time to French pride and to the desire for European unity.

This nuclear factor differentiat-ing France and West Germany is the ultimate obstacle on the road toward a European defense. Mr. Schmidt's proposals are an elegant but still unsatisfactory way of transcending and defining the problem.

Yet whatever its numerous limitations — and they are military as well as political - the Schmidt proposals have undeniable pedagogic value. They rightly place the emphasis on the importance of a greater joint conventional effort of France and the Federal Republic. And they point up the ambiguity of France's defense posture.

Today, contrary to the situation in the '60s, more security for France may have to mean less independence. It will be a hard choice, but one that French governments will have to confront in the future.

Are the death squads primarily run with the president's full knowledge or are they to some extent the autonomous agencies of local military commanders or even husinessmen and plantation owners? in the end, the debate seems almost irrelevant. Even the embassy, which is trying to play down human rights abuses to make it easier for the Reagan administración to persuade Congress to permit resumption of military and economic ties, puts ont a pretty devastating critique of what going on in Guatemala. The embassy's latest human rights analysis observes that "reports of massacres and other atrocioes continued" and that "government securi-ty forces, including the army, were responsible for an unspecified number of arbitrary deaths and disappearances in 1983.

The analysis acknowledges reports of "incidents where military personnel turned over guerrillas or suspected guerrillas to civil defense patrols

If the armed forces were exposed to training in U.S. military colleges, notions of respect for civilians, fair play and subservience to civilian government might be slowly transmitted. Beneath the waves of human rights abuses there are stirrings for change in Guatemala. They surface in a cautious but on occasion brave local press. A new generation is beginning to permeate the hardened cells of Guatemalan society, even in the army. It needs encouraging.

ity reached out to achieve those re-sults, ignoring the traditional rules of judicial self-control. An example perhaps insufficiently noticed was a case on the privacy rights of prison inmates. Most civi-lized countries assume that even prisoners have a certain residual dignity that the state should not invade. When it was disclosed in South Africa recently that certain prisoners are watched continuously on closed-cir-cuit television, people were shocked. In the case before the U.S. Supreme Court, a lower court had held that inmates had a limited legal pri-vary interest, protecting them against seizure of their belongings when there was no issue of prison security. Every lower federal court that considered the question had found prison cells protected to some extent by the Fourth Amendment's prohibition on illegal searches and seizures.

A 5-to-4 majority disagreed. And it did not merely find against this prisoner on the facts, as it might have. It held in sweeping terms that the Fourth Amendment does not protect It was the unnecessary breadth of the decision that drew from Justice Stevens this dissenting protest: "By telling prisoners that no aspect of their individuality, from a photo of a child to a letter from a wife, is entitled to constitutional protection, the court breaks with the ethical tradi-tion that I had thought was enshrined forever in our jurisprudence." PARIS — Massimo Bogianck-ino has made it clear in his first season directing the Paris Opera that he has a well-developed sense of history. So he surely knew he was thumbing his nose at the muse of history when he scheduled a new production of Wagner's "Tann-häuser."

Like other foreign composers in the 19th century, Wagner had to bend to Paris's singular demands. He revised his then-15-year-old ro-mantic opera, inserted a ballet and agreed to have it sung in French. The rehearsal period was long and agonizing, at least for Wagner. The first performance on March 13, 1861, was one of the great scandales in operane history, principally because the ballet came early in the opera, where it made dramatic sense, instead of later on, when the powerful but babitually tardy members of the Jockey Club would be sure to see it. It lasted three performances.

In any case, the time for the music of the future had not arrived, as today's operagoers are reminded hy French comments of the period on Wagner, reproduced on banners and hung around the Opera's grand escalier — all negative except for Baudelaire's. Yet it is in the Paris version that "Tannhäuser" is mainly heard today, although sometimes rafted onto parts of the earlie Dresden version.

Compared with Wagner's trouhles in 1861, Bogianekino's problems with "Tannhauser" in 1984 play are sketches of dresses that seem relatively minor. There is nothing the matter with a simple view of "Tannhäuser," but despite this freedom of movement for soloists and chorus. Szábo made little use of it for any dramatic or poetic purpose.

The head-on squareness of the Act 2 set suggests an absolutely square society obviously enough, but the effect was watered down by the aimless milling around of the guesis. Then the repressive aspects of this society were reinforced by having a hunch of obvious secretpolice types crisscrossing through the assembled multitude. There was seemingly endless crossing of the stage by supernumeraries, and supernumerary dogs — one of whom predictably balked and had to be dragged from stage left to stage right to much laughter.

The sets provided a workable scenic space of a kind that might The Associated Press

Prices Surge on the NYSE Stock Exchange bounded bigher late Monday dollar and the price of gold. The Dow Jooes industrial average, down about 6 points 81 midsession after slipping 1.99 Friday, rose 11.48 points to 1134.05. Declines led advances by a slim margin.

Volume to 3 P.M. New York time was about 54.5 million shares compared with 54.8 million in the corresponding period Friday, the slowest session in seven weeks.

Analysts said the rise in fluctuations in the dollar and gold on international exchanges held the world's spotlight and had investors ponder-ing the significance of the actions.

According to George Pirrone of Dreyfus Corp., gold's drop recently "is saying we are not going to have a resurgence of inflation in the near future and that's good for the economy and the stock market." Gold, which took a drubbing last week, rebounded late Monday afternoon after plunging at the outset on international exchanges. The dollar, which had been higher recently, gave ground. The actions in the greenback and precious metals is due to continued high interest rates in the United States and an economy that is much more robust than most observers had anticipated, analysts said. According to one published report, the feel-ing among international traders is that the U.S.

noted "bonds are up but the stock market is not reacting to that. Why? Because there is a fear the Federal Reserve is going to tighten credit."

Various reports predicted the Fed would raise the discount rate it charges member banks for loans to 9½ percent from the present 9 percent to stem a surge to borrowing and preent a resurgence of inflation. Some investors were encouraged the Fed late Friday posted a smaller than expected $1-bil-lion increase in the narrowest measure of the U.S. money supply. But federal funds rates, which banks charge one another for overnight loans, were trading at 11½ percent.

Analysts said foreign investors are likely to come to the United States with their money. But many contend they will move into the bond market, where yields are extremely high.

 Party Clears Way For More Foreign Banks in Australia CANBERRA, Australia — The ruling Labor Party cleared the way Monday for more foreign banks to operate here, provided they stimulate industry, commerce and exports and provide finance for housing.

The decision, taken at the party's annual conference, is binding on the government. Attempts by the party's left wing to har the entry of foreign banks for at least two years were

The decision enables the treasurer, Paul Keating, to implement a report that recommended licensing at least six overseas banks as part of moves to deregulate the country's once tightly controlled financial system. Prime Minister Bob Hawke said the conference bad made a sensible decision and the cabinet would meet to decide when newcomers could start operations.

He said the government would be looking for a spread of banks from the United States, Japan, Western Europe and countries in the Asia-Pacific region.

The Bank of New Zealand and Banque Nationale de Paris are already in Australia.

Concessions won by the left wing require the ewcomers to provide housing finance, particularly to low income groups, and innovative services and facilities not currently available in Australia.

The conference decided that foreign banks would be considered on a case-by-case basis, and that every effort should be made to achieve

Newcomers will have to set up a subsidiary rather than a branch, in order to insulate the Australian entity from any potential problems of the parent bank, including exposure to international debt, and prevent any destabilizing flow of funds.

The conference resolution said new banks would have to boost employment opportunities in the financial sector and consult uoions on technological change,

Mr. Keating has favored licensing foreign banks to provide competition to the four major domestic institutions.

Nigeria May Get Oil Quota Rise

But OPEC Assent Seen as Unofficial

By Bob Hagerry

VIENNA — Nigeria, straining under a huge debt load, is likely to get unofficial permission to raise its oil production moderately later this year, OPEC sources said Monday.

But ministers emerging from a meeting of the Organization of Pe-troleum Exporting Countries market-monitoring committee indicat-ed that they would recommend no change in OPEC'S official prices and production quotas.

While the organization sympa-thizes with Nigeria's plight it is not eager to reopen the divisive issue of production quotas. "Everybody has a claim, " an OPEC source noted. Thus, be said, OPEC would prefer to turn a blind eye to higher

The market-monitoring commit-tee — composed of the United Arab Emirates, Indonesia, Algeria and Venzuela - will make its recommendations to a meeting of all 13 OPEC oil ministers that opens here Tuesday.

Ministers attending Monday's session empahsized the need for the cartel to tighten its discipline in the face of a weak oil market. Industry analysts estimate that OPEC's oil production has totaled 18 million to 18.5 million barrels a day in recent months, compared with the group's official ceiling of 17.5 mil-

This trend contrasts sharply with the knopes expressed recently by Hong Kong's financial secretary.

Later that month, 20 points were shed in only a few minutes when the Chinese leader, Deng Xiaoping, confirmed the policy on troops in a confirmed the policy on troops in a television transmission from Beijthis time next year."

Intervious Chinese assurances, interactors ments would act like innoculations on Hong Kong's investors, and have less and less effect on the market. Now I can only say that the conversation, "you could have the confirmed the policy on troops in a television transmission from Beijthis time next year." Ltd., a London-based stockbroker-

Strong Growth Seen in Europe's Data Industry

GENEVA - Amual revenues of the European electron-ic-data industry are expected to exceed $1 billion by 1985, according to a survey published Monday by Business Interna-tional, a Geneva-based business analysis firm. The survey estimated that revenues last year totaled $700 million, up from $532 million in 1982 and $433 million in 1981.

While the European industry is smaller than its U.S. counter part, expected future growth of 25 percent to 30 percent a year in the next few years will out-pace the U.S. industry's expected annual growth rate of 23.3

Nonetheless, a shortage of capital, the incompatibility of different systems, a lack of skilled personnel and an absence of strategie coordination could hinder the European industry's growth, it said.

TO A DISTANT ISLAND

By James McConkey. 196 pp. $13.95, Dutton, 2 Park Ave., New York, N.Y. 10016.

Reviewed by Harvey Shapiro

T N 1886, Anton Chekhov, for oo reasons his I friends or family could understand, set out on a 6,500-mile journey from Moscow across Siberia to the penal colony on the island of Sakhalin. Because his reasons for making the trip are shrouded in mystery and conjecture, and because this was a journey-that proved crucial in a great career, it has taken on E mythic significance. It's like Melville's going to sea or Ganguin's break for his South Sea is-

Of course, it wasn't any paradise Chekhov was seeking. Sakhalin was colonized wholly by convicts and those who policed them. And Chekhov made the trip the hard way, traversing the frozen wastes of Siberia, 3,000 miles of them, mainly by horse-drawn carriage, sitting in an unprotected basket, when he could just as easily have taken the sea route around Russia 10 Sakhalin, which is the way he returned.

He did it the hard way oot because he had a bad travel agent. He wanted punishment. At least that's the theory developed in James McConkey's novelistic meditation — a book that alternates between biography, autobiogra-phy, and essayistic musings — on this strange chapter of Chekhov's life.

His frame for the book is his version of Chekhov's journey, from the seemingly chance moment Chekhov conceived of it. glancing at some notes on Sakhalin prepared by his brother Michael, who was a law student, to Chekhov's return. For this narrative he draws on Chekhov's letters written en route, accounts of the trip by Chekhov's many hiographers, and on Chekhov's book about his stay at the penal colony, "The Island: A Journey to Sakhalin," published four years after his return. McConkey interlards that narrative with his interpretaoons of Chekhov's stories, musings on Chekhov's character, and memories of his own stay in Italy.

The narrative of the trip, which is the bulk of the book and its most highly charged element, is not factual. McConkey takes hints, lines from Chekhov's letters and other documents, and develops them min scenes, adding his own dialogue and description, and he does all of this in a conscious imitation of Chekhov's fictional style. He is in effect making Chekhov stories out of the material supplied in Che-

There is a set piece early in the book that establishes the book's momentum. It takes place in Chekhov's house to Moscow. He is at his desk, writing to his friend, the conservative publisher Suvorin. His letter is a continuation of his argument with Suvorin about the trip he means to undertake. It comes to a close with what appears to be a straight death wish, or at least a clear statement that what his coming trip means to Chekhov is a chance to confront death: "And with this, out of respect for you, allow me in fling myself into a deep gorge and smash my skull to smithereens."

There is oothing in Chekhov's life at that point to explain the disturbance mirrored in this letter. His writing was bringing him money and fame (indeed, when he arrived in Tomsk, a town deep in Siberia, he found posters an-nouncing the performance of one of his one-act farces). He and his family were comfortably established in Moscow. It may have been the death of his brother Nicholas from tuberculosis, the disease that was even then afflicting Chekhov, that brought on this crisis. Or it may have been success itself, which he found too easy, illusory.

Io any case, the journey to Sakhalin did provide him his brush with death, and in its brute landscape and scenes of privation and slavery, gave him the jolt he needed. He was to live for 14 years after the trip and in that time he did his best work.

McConkey describes the journey brilliantly
—the scenes, the people, their probable impact on his subject. It is only in the later parts of the book, when he begins mechanically to alternate the account of his minor journey to Florence with Chekhov's major journey in Sakhalin that his book stalls; the connections he wants m make seem tenuous.

We have had many straight biographies of writers in recent years that leave their subjects curiously diminished. McConkey's achieve-ment in this fictionalized account of one chapter of Chekhov's life is to send the reader back to the Russian master with renewed wonder.

Wimbledon's stiff-oecked veiled threats about maintaining schoolboy discipline this year may have taken some of the showmanship out of an already dry game. But those dire mumblings from the old boys may have forced McEnroe into a dis-

McEnroe's demeanor was almost trancelike in its screnity while he played audaciously, continually going for lines and winners.

"It's unfortunate and unfair the way things are done here," said McEnroe, "That's why I let my tennis do my talkiog."

Even now McEnroe cannot resist sticking his toe into every available vat of hot water. His statement in victory that he didn't think anybody could beat him when he played his best brought a tart riposte from Con-nors: "That's an awful big statement to back up for four or five years, isn't it?"

It is the mixed blessing of the sport that it has two champions in their prime who are a delight to aficionados but, perhaps, a damper on general enthusiasm for tennis. McEnroe is 54-1 this year while Wimbledon women's champion Martina Navratilova has been beaten only twice in 18 months.

Neither has the public follow ing of the old favorites they beat in the finals here — Connors and Chris Evert Lloyd.

For the moment, McEnroe and Navratilova are playing oot against their peers but against the ghosts of tennis history. They are playing not so much to win matches as to create vivid memories of their excellence.

That is a formidable enterprise. But at times it takes a secand cup of coffee to watch them at their work. If they haven't finished before you can get to it.

Chagall and his wife, Valentine, at his 97th-birthday opening in Saint-Paul-de-Vence.

A Triple Play for Marc Chagall at 97

By Mary Ellen Bortin

SAINT-PAUL-DE-VENCE, France— The French painter Marc Chagall celebrated his 97th birthday in grand style, with three simultaneous exhibitions in France paying tribute to his life and work.

"I never thought I'd have the joy of seeing these pictures again." Chagall said Saturday, his blue eyes twinkling, as he toured an exhibition of his paintings in Saint-Paul-de-Vence, his adoptive hometown in the foothills above France's Mediterranean coast.

An exhibit in Nice of his stained-glass windows and sculpture also opened on Saturday, his birthday, while a collection of 200 works on paper opened at the Pompidou Center in Paris June 30.

Chagall's paintings portray a fantastic world peopled with animals, lovers, fiddlers, flowers, women and acrobats. His staioedglass windows decorate the United Nations building in New York and the synagogue at the Hadassah Medical Center in Jerusalem.

Born into a religious Jewish family in the Russian village of Vitebsk on July 7, 1887, he appears unscathed by the passage of time. His pace is slower, the artist's hand less steady, but he continues to work from morning to evening at the Provençal farmhouse where he lives with his second wife, Valen-

"I haven't seen this in 60 years," he exclaimed, still clowning as he clung to the arm of Danielle Mitterrand, wife of the president of France, and chatted with the French culture minister, Jack Lang. The cumulative effect of the three exhibits is an explosion of color infused with the tenderness and whimsy that have become Chagall's trademark.

"I brought my objects from Russia and Paris gave them their light," Chagall wrote in his autobiography, which be published more than half a century ago at the age of 44.

In his work the images drawn from life in the Jewish ghetto of his youth merge with the brilliant color that began to illuminate his paintings on his arrival in France in 1910. He studied art in St. Petershurg, now Leningrad, and traveled to Paris when be was 23.

Although he barely spoke French, be made contact with an international community of young artists. Within a year be moved into La Ruche, a Left Bank artists' colooy where Amedco Modigliani, Chaim Soutine and Fernand Leger were his neighbors. His friends included the poet Guillaume Apollinaire. He spent four years in France and went on to Berlin, where he enjoyed considerable success with the German avant-garde, before Chagail and his wife left Russia in 1922, spending a year in Germany, where he ex-plored lithography before settling in Paris. There his renown grew, bringing with it a stream of orders for work. He obtained French citizenship in 1937, but after World War II broke out, accepted the New York Museum of Modern Art's offer of temporary refuge in the United States. In New York, Chagall rapidly became a part of the art scene and made friends with Igor Stravinsky, scoring a success with his backdrops and costumes for the "Firebird." He suffered a major blow when Bella died in 1944, and at the end of the war moved back to France alone, Since 1950, he has lived bere, drawn to the brilliant Mediterranean light. "We are all part of the circus," Chagail likes to say. At the retrospective exhibit at Saint-Paul-de-Vence, he waved away a swarm of photographers with a sweep of his Panama hat and seemed for a moment to resent the intrusion.

"But it's for you that they came," Lang said, and Chagall's face lit up - delighted still to be part of the circus.

A bronze statue of the late actor

John Wayne on horseback, which was originally painted in lifelike colors, now stands before the offices of Great Western Savings &: Loan in Beverly Hills, California. The statue was shipped from Italy from the studio of the sculptor Harry Jackson, who painted the work in a Renaissance technique in which he specializes. But the Beverly Hills Architectural Review Board - and Wayne family members — objected, and the paint was stripped. . . Michael Korda, edi-tor-in-chief of the New York publishing house Simon & Schuster, has taken aim at cowboy boots in Penthouse magazine, commenting: "It is ironic that cowboy boots have become high fashion while the cowboy himself has ceased to exist. Cowboy boots were expected to last a lifetime, and cowboys laid out what was for them a fortune which explains why they wanted to he buried in them. What else can we buy that links us to the romance of the old frontier and is one thing we can still make better than the Japanese?

Mayor Edward Kech of New York signed a bill to name Manhat-A crowd of 75,000 wine tasters in Soviet dissident Andrei D. Sakha-West Germany formed a line about row and his wife, Yelena G. Bonner. 50 miles (80 kilometers) Saturday Sakharov-Bonner Corner will be located on the southeast corner of East 67th Street and Third Avenue, Wine Road, which stretches not far from the Soviet mission to through 35 towns and villages from the United Nations. "As the Sovi-Bockenheim through the Haardt ets pass this corner each day, let mountains to Schweigen on the them read the names 'Sakharov' border with France, Enthusiasts and 'Bonoer,' " Koch said.
